Elections Provides Some Clarity for 118th Congress

Republicans Won the House

Achieved 218 members to win the majority

Could be 220+ depending on final tallies

Democrats control the Senate*

Democrats achieved 50-49 on November 8th

Runoff in Georgia on December 6th will determine whether it stays a 50-50 Senate, or becomes 51-49 in January

2022 Congressional Tasks After Mid-Terms

The Work

Pass a FY 2023 budget OR pass another continuing resolution to avoid a shutdown.

- Potential omnibus package
- Pass FY23 National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA)
- Longer term items?
- Democratic majority: unfinished business
- Retiring members: last hurray

The Members

- Determine 2023 leadership, prepare for committee leadership changes
- House Republicans: Solidify oversight wish lists, policy agendas
- House Democrats: Determine House caucus leadership, using leverage in tight minority

Examining the Social Determinants of Health: Measures, Evidence, and Policy Solutions

Despite significant investments to improve access to high-quality health care, health inequities in the United States persist by race, ethnicity, sexual orientation, gender identity, and disability, as well as by economic and community level factors such as geographic location, poverty status, and employment. While opportunities to advance health equity through clinical care continue to be important, addressing the ways in which SDOH increase or decrease the risk of poor health outcomes is critical to improving the nation's health and wellbeing. Examining the root causes of SDOH is also critical for developing measures, evaluating data sources, assessing evidence and for formulating policy responses. This briefing will: 1) define and evaluate the differences between SDOH, social drivers of health, social needs, and social risk factors 2) assess the past and current SDOH policy landscape including metrics development and data source evaluation 3) discuss health care payor, provider, and community-based efforts and 4) outline potential policy solutions at the federal, state, and local levels.
