Fast Facts

- In the 34 states¹ where the marketplaces are either run by the federal government or in partnership with a state, $67 million in federal grants have gone to 105 community organizations to serve as “navigators” to help enroll consumers and small businesses.²
- The federal government made a minimum of $600,000 available to each federally-facilitated or state partnership marketplace service area to fund navigators.³
- In 16 states and the District of Columbia⁴ that are running their own exchanges or marketplaces, there will be a combination of navigators and in-person assisters to help with enrollment.⁵
- Federally-funded community health centers in all 50 states received a total of $150 million in federal grants to help with enrollment.^{6 7}

Background

Beginning October 1, 2013, millions of individuals and small businesses will be able to purchase private health insurance plans in all 51 of the new health insurance marketplaces. There will be a range of insurance plans as well as financial assistance options available for lower-income people.

Government money has gone to community organizations and hired staff to help individuals, families and small businesses compare and contrast plans, identify what type of financial assistance may be available and help complete and send application forms for insurance beginning January 1, 2014. Private entities, non-profit consumer groups and labor unions will also provide assistance.^{8 9}

Two of the key programs to help are the navigators and the in-person assisters. All marketplaces are required to have navigators. In the 16 states and the District of Columbia, where states are running their own marketplaces, and in the five states where the marketplaces will be operated in partnership with the federal government, there will also be in-person assisters. Navigators and in-person assisters play a similar role in helping people to enroll.¹⁰

Funding for these enrollment helpers has been greater for states running their own marketplaces or marketplaces in partnership with the federal government. Funding available for navigator and in-person assistance grants varies by state, ranging from about $542,000 in Maine to $30 million in Illinois. The federal government awarded $61 million to 27 states with federal and partnership marketplaces, averaging $2.1 million per state. The 15 state-based marketplaces for which funding data are available already have received more than $116 million, an average of $7.8 million per state.¹¹

In the 16 states and the District of Columbia, the navigator programs received more than $3 billion in block grants from the federal government to set up their own marketplaces,¹² but federal regulations stated that insurance exchange establishment funds could not be used to directly create navigator positions. Money could be used, however, to pay for administrative costs and training of navigators. States asked community organizations with established ties to uninsured communities to apply for navigator administrative and training funds.

Long-term funding for the program is supposed to come from the operations of the state marketplace itself, which will be funded in part by insurance premiums.¹³

Because of this funding challenge, the Department of Health and Human Services created the in-person assister program, which allows states to use establishment money for funding. That program is optional for states, and the 27 with federal marketplaces and two of those with partnerships have chosen not to have them.¹⁴

A September 2013 report by the Republican staff of the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform concluded that the Obama administration improperly created and funded the assister program to get around financing restrictions in the navigator program. The Republicans also asserted that training is inadequate, and that funding to pay employees of navigator and assister organizations based on the number of people they enroll encourages them to “provide biased or incomplete information about ObamaCare to maximize enrollment.” Moreover, the staff found that, despite protections against conflicts of interest, navigators and assisters won’t have to disclose that they are paid per enrollee.¹⁵

Marketplace helpers include:

Navigators

Staff at navigator organizations will help walk people through what can be a confusing process of buying insurance in the marketplaces. They will explain the differences among bronze, silver, gold and platinum policies, each of which have different deductibles, co-payments and premiums. They will also help people estimate their family income to determine whether they qualify for federal subsidies or are eligible for Medicaid.¹⁶

To ensure against conflicts of interest, navigators cannot receive direct or indirect financial compensation or gifts from health insurers. States will monitor enrollment patterns and penalize navigators who cross the line.¹⁷

Navigators receive about 20 to 30 hours of online training developed by the federal government and must pass an exam. In some states, they need additional licensing.¹⁸

The staff will speak multiple languages, and, once people have insurance, they will help with grievances about health plans and premiums, and steer people to the appropriate state agencies for help.¹⁹

On August 15, 2013, the federal government announced $67 million in grants to states where it is operating a marketplace or running one in conjunction with the state. Money went to 105 organizations, such as universities, food banks, community groups and health organizations that have demonstrated the ability to connect with populations that are most likely to benefit from the ability to purchase insurance in the marketplaces.²⁰ The 16 states and the District of Columbia running their own exchanges also have navigator programs.²¹

In-Person Assisters

In the 17 states and the District of Columbia running their own marketplaces, and the seven working in partnership with the federal government, grants have been provided by the federal government and the states to organizations for additional face-to-face support for consumers. The government calls this program “non-navigator assistance” and it is administered by the state, not the federal government.^{22 23}

Certified Application Counselors

Counselors who already work at community health centers, along with health care providers, hospital staff and social service agency employees are receiving additional training and certification by the federal government to educate consumers and assist with the completion of applications for coverage.²⁴

Private Insurance Agents and Brokers

Private health insurance agents and brokers may help consumers and small businesses find insurance and enroll in the marketplaces. They may also assist them in getting tax credits. Brokers may get paid by insurers, but they cannot also get federal or state grants to act as navigators.²⁵

Call Centers

In all states, twenty-four hour federal call centers will provide information about eligibility and enrollment in English, Spanish and 150 other languages.^{26 27} Some states running their own marketplaces will also have their own call centers.²⁸

Community Health Centers

About 1,200 community health centers around the country have received a total of $150 million in federal money to help with outreach and enrollment.²⁹

Private and Non-profit organizations

Insurance companies, retail pharmacy chains and other health care-related entities are planning to provide information and help with enrollment, including Enroll America,³⁰ AARP, the American Medical Association, Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Illinois, Oklahoma and Texas, CVS Caremark Corp., the League of United Latin American Citizens, the NAACP, the National Baptist Convention and the National Partnership for Women and Families.^{31 32 33 34 35}
