What's a strength you bring to health policy?

My strength lies in bridging clinical and policy spheres. My nursing background grounds me in care delivery, and my Senate experience helps me analyze how federal incentives shape behavior, ensuring my federal policymaking stays rooted in the needs of people at the center.

What are you proudest of in your health policy work so far?

I'm proudest of helping grow the next generation of health policy leaders. I met a Rhode Island graduate student at a constituent meeting who shared her passion for policy, encouraged her to join our team, and watched her thrive with us throughout her master's program.

What does leadership look like to you at this stage in your career?

Leadership at this stage means guiding my team and leading up. Keeping the Senator informed on emerging policy and clinical perspectives while mentoring two junior staffers to grow professionally and ensure our work remains grounded in evidence and the individual patient or clinician experience.
