What's a health policy issue that personally motivates you?

Ensuring that people with disabilities have access to home and community-based services.

What does leadership look like to you at this stage in your career?

Leadership looks like modeling high standards for integrity, collaboration, and honesty. That means having the courage to be honest with people and the integrity not to screw them over in public policy, even if it seems like I have the opportunity to.

Who do you admire in health policy, and why?

I admire my mentor and former boss, Michael Gamel-McCormick. The way he prioritizes the disability community in all aspects of his work is something I admire and strive to emulate in my own career.
